The Growler Health Impact Project, funded by the University of Washington's Population Health Initiative, analyzed the troves of raw Growler jet noise data collected over the past decade.

The study's three major objectives:

- ❖ Provide a robust assessment of Growler noise levels, lengths of noise exposure, and frequency of noise events across the region;
- ❖ Estimate the health risks to the population, including potential hearing loss, increased blood pressure, sleep disturbance, stress and annoyance, and childhood learning interference, and;
- ❖ Map estimated noise levels and related noise health risks to inform affected communities about how to protect and advocate for their health.

Hear about final study results. They will talk about ways YOU can be involved.

Spread the word and be sure to mark your calendars for this webinar!

2022 Jet Noise Density Maps QuietSkies analyzes the jet noise reports collected by San Juan County. GIS expert Sarah Blake took the 11,000 reports in 2021 and 15,000 in 2022 and turned them into noise density maps. They allow us to visualize impacted communities.

The maps have been helpful for the UW Growler Health Impact Project Study.
